The name "NOEL" is one of the best known in Shreveport, Louisiana. Noel roots in Caddo Parish date back to the early part of the last century, and Noel family members have long left marks of their influence there—as planters, industrialists, businessmen, and community leaders. The name is virtually concomitant with oil and gas development, with philanthropy, and with civic improvement.

The James S. Noel, Jr., Memorial United Methodist Church dedicated by a father in memory of a son who died in 1901—is one of the handsomest and most famous buildings in Shreveport.

Traditionally, Noels have tended to be politically conservative, with a bit of the maverick and the iconoclast thrown in.

The grandson of the man who built the church is one of today's leading Shreveport citizens and fits his ancestral mold well.

James S. Noel—a successful businessman not quite 70 who looks 20 years younger, founder and president of the Noel Estate Foundation, president of Ark-La-Tex Salvage Pool, owner of some 4,000 Caddo and Bossier Parish acres, chess aficionado, former educator and athlete—has recently bought the abandoned Texas and Pacific Railroad Station on Market Street in Shreveport. The three-story depot, still in a state of renovation, is intended as the future home of approximately 80,000 books that Mr. Noel has collected over the past 50 years.

An eighteenth-century scholar, Mr. Noel reveres books, especially biography, and especially Samuel Johnson. (He is one of last year's founding members of the LSU Johnson Society.) Going back a century earlier, Mr. Noel is a lover of Shakespeare, and in the current century an admirer of the late Winston Churchill.

But his literary tastes are wide and varied: A thick book of quotations titled Words that Burn and purchased in 1930 launched Mr. Noel's library, which subsequently led him where his interests tugged. And because those interests range greatly, the volumes he has bought cover many subjects, from art to acting to architecture to anthropology; from philosophy to psychology to politics; from religion to war; from fact to fiction to fantasy. He has categorized his collection into 125 different subject areas, and unlike some people who purchase merely to possess, Mr. Noel fondly reads many of his books, often several times and often engrossed in several at once.

Mr. Noel holds a bachelor's degree from Centenary College, conducted graduate study at the University of Oklahoma, and founded the Caddo Teachers' Association before he left that profession in 1950.

Meanwhile, back at the railroad station where trains no longer run, there are some problems. Cataloging tens of thousands of books is a monumental chore, even with some experienced assistance that Mr. Noel has recruited. Simply assembling the shelves and arranging their contents in order is hardly less arduous. Moreover, renovating an early-1940s building is an expensive proposition, and the Noel Foundation can allocate only so much money per year for the project. Mr. Noel, however, is a particularly dedicated bibliophile, determined to turn his private library into a public research facility for serious scholars—like himself.

Captain Salmon White Entertains: The Friends’ Annual Banquet

The LSU Faculty Club was the setting for the Friends’ annual banquet on February 16. A record attendance of over eighty persons, including several out-of-town guests, mingled for aperitifs before sitting down to dinner.

Guests of the Friends for the evening included Major General and Mrs. O. J. Daigle and Professor and Mrs. Walton J. Patrick, all of whom received life memberships in the Friends in recognition of their gifts to the Middleton Library. General and Mrs. Daigle were honored for their gift of ten Knute Heldner paintings, including a self-portrait and several landscapes Heldner painted prior to his move to Louisiana. Professor and Mrs. Patrick were recognized for the gift of over 200 volumes in the field of American literature. The most notable of the books in the Patrick collection is Sherwood Anderson and Other Creoles with drawings by William Spratling, arranged by William Faulkner. It is the first publication of the Pelican Bookshop Press done while Faulkner was living in the New Orleans French Quarter in the 1920s. Professor Patrick, retired dean of English at Auburn University, is the first person to have received a Ph.D. in English at LSU. Chancellor Emeritus Cecil G. Taylor presented the Daigles and the Patricks plaques from the Friends.

The after-dinner address was delivered by Marcus Allen McCorison, director and librarian of the American Antiquarian Society. His “speech” was a spritely discourse on the adventures and misadventures of one Captain Salmon White, a fictitious New England book collector. The talk, accompanied by humorous slides, was replete with literary and library allusions. The stormy seas of Captain White’s bibliographical sailings were greeted with gales of laughter from an appreciative audience.

William Morris and the Kelmscott Press: The Bookmaker’s Art

A collection of private-press limited editions relating to William Morris and the Kelmscott Press was exhibited in the second-floor hallway of the Middleton Library during the month of March. The exhibit was sponsored by the Friends of the LSU Library assisted by a grant from the Louisiana Committee for the Humanities, the state arm of the National Endowment for the Humanities. The William Morris collection is the private collection of John J. Walsdorf, an employee of the bookselling firm of B. H. Blackwell, Ltd.

William Morris, a designer and craftsman in the decorative arts, founded the Kelmscott Press in England in the 1890s. He is credited with the inauguration of the modern fine-press movement in which finely designed and printed books are produced by small printing establishments in limited quantities. After Morris’ death many typographic admirers of his work produced books imitating the Kelmscott style. The collection exhibited in the Middleton Library contained over 125 books, including original Kelmscott Press editions and modern fine-press works relating to William Morris.

In connection with the exhibit, a lecture by Mr. Walsdorf was given on March 10. Mr. Walsdorf spoke of his experiences in becoming a knowledgeable book collector to an audience of William Morris enthusiasts and bibliophiles. The lecture was followed by a wine-and-cheese reception in the Library staff lounge. The text of the lecture has been printed as a supplement to this issue of Lumieres.
Gifts

A set of the 1861 letterpress of John James Audubon’s Birds of America was presented to the Friends of the LSU Library by former Chancellor Paul Murrill and his wife, Nancy. The 1861 edition is referred to as the “Bien” edition.

John Woodhouse Audubon, the son of the naturalist, planned with J. Bien, a New York lithographer, to issue a second edition of the double elephant folio of the Birds of America. The edition was never completed because of the outbreak of the Civil War. However, the text was printed before the project had to be abandoned. This edition of the text was acquired by the Murrills, who had the bindings restored and presented the set to the Library as an expression of their love and appreciation for the University.

A resolution was passed by the Friends of the LSU Library Board commending Dr. Murrill for his support of the Library during his years as chancellor. The Board thanked the Murrills for their interest in the Library collection and gave them life memberships in the Friends’ organization.

Purchases

The Friends of the LSU Library honored two board members this spring with purchases made for the Middleton Library. A presentation in honor of Chancellor Emeritus Cecil G. Taylor of a rare volume on French proverbs was made on the occasion of the rededication of La Maison Française.

The book, published in 1789 in Paris, is Mattiènes Sènoisées by the Abbé Jean Charles Francois Tuet.

The gift to the Library in Chancellor Taylor’s honor was made in recognition of his work in the revitalization of the Friends’ organization and his role in the renovation of the French House.

Another special presentation was made at the Golden Jubilee celebration of the LSU School of Library and Information Science in May. Tribute was paid to Mrs. Flornell F. Morton, professor emeritus of library science and director of the Library School, 1944-70, for her support of the Library during her years as director and since as an officer and board member of the Friends.

The purchase is A Collection of Bookbindings: The Henry Davis Gift by Mirjam M. Foot, published by the British Library. This set contains discussions, descriptions, and illustrations from one of the finest collections of book bindings in the world.
